A NEW RAILROAD.

Where will it cross the Iron Mountain?

There is a chance for us. A Proposed Route.

As stated last week the Williamsville, Greenville and St. Louis railroad has been chartered. The road is built from Williamsville to Greenville now. It is to pass through Bollinger county.

As yet no survey has been made, but several will be made. It is to the interest of every Twin City person to have one survey through this place. If Grand Tower is the objective point, as it no doubt is, then this town is on almost a direct line.

Engineer McCrea, who will probably conduct the survey, told Circuit Clerk H. M. Smith, on Friday before last that he would probably be in Marble Hill in about three weeks.

The editor has been furnished with the following proposed route, by one who is familiar with the country through which it passes.

From Greenville to Bear creek, about six miles; thence down Bear creek to Castor near Buchanan, thence down Castor a few miles to where Pond creek empties into that stream; thence up Pond creek to the farm of John Jackson, from which a short run along a ridge will bring the road to Pecosum creek; thence down that creek to the confluence of Crooked and Hurricane; up Hurricane a few miles, across to Cedar branch near Newell's farm; and across the divide past Newell's store; thence across to Little Whitewater, and up Limbaugh creek to near Judge Hills, south of Sedgewickville; thence to Big Whitewater, and after an eight mile run up that stream across the corner of Cape county to Apple creek, down which a good survey could be made to the Mississippi river, almost opposite Grand Tower.

At Grand Tower connection can be made with lines direct to both St. Louis and Chicago. A road could be built over the above proposed route with but one or two small cuts.

Owing to Prof. Vandiver's illness his lecture is postponed until Saturday evening, March 3.
